

The Coalition of the Liberal Arts invites proposals for

CoLA COURSES

What is a CoLA Course?

CoLA courses are intended to create flexible faculty and student learning communities by crossing schools and student populations. Courses must be open to undergraduate students from any Emory school; graduate students and other faculty and staff are also welcome to participate. We invite proposals that think creatively about course structure and pedagogy.

CoLA Courses Must

1. Be proposed by a faculty-student project team. A team includes a minimum of 2 faculty members from different schools across the university, at least 2 undergraduate students, and may also include graduate and professional students and/or staff.
2. Reflect a communal learning process.
3. Include an experiential learning component.
4. Connect to the larger Emory community through active engagement.

If you are interested in these courses but are unable to attend either forum, please address any ideas or concerns to Ruqayyah Strozier, the CoLA program assistant, at ruqayyah.strozier@emory.edu or to Robyn Fivush, Associate Vice-Provost for Academic Innovation, at psyrf@emory.edu.

For more information, as well as opportunities to share ideas and identify possible partners, we will be holding forums on:

Monday, February 23rd at 12 pm
in the Jones Room of the Woodruff
Library (feel free to bring a lunch!)

Tuesday, February 24th at 5pm in Room 114 of the School of Nursing

Proposals are due April 18th. For the full Call for Proposals, visit liberalartsforwardemory.com.
